House Hears About Encoded Circuit Board Missing From Chinese Rocket

By Eric Schmitt

WASHINGTON -- A secret encoded circuit board containing sensitive technology was missing from the wreckage of an American satellite aboard a Chinese rocket that exploded in 1996, and American officials said Tuesday they suspected that Chinese authorities took the board.

into whether sensitive space technology was transferred to China by American aerospace corporations using Chinese rockets to launch their satellites.

Rep. Curt Weldon, R-Pa., said the missing circuit board would be a main focus of a special select committee the House created last week to investigate the wide-ranging China accusations. The control
